Anemia And Recurrent Attacks Of Acute Abdomen Case Presentation

Abstract

A 15 year old girl from Mosul presented with recurrent attacks of severe abdominal pains, in one occasion a mass was felt in abdomen, which disappeared in the following day. After another attack she passed fresh blood then fleshy mass per rectum.

The patient was severely anemic with brownish macules on her lips, oral mucosa, finger tips and toes. Esophagiogastroduodenoscopy and barium follow throw revealed multiple polyps. The patient had sustained small intestinal perforation and it ended with resection of part of Jejunum. She is a case of Peutz-Jegher’s syndrome, she needs regular follow up because of potential risk of acquiring malignant tumors.
